

Crisis Screening

The process by which the required level of care is determined. Crisis screening is used to identify the potential risk of harm to self or others, urgency of need for behavioral health service and type/level of services needed to resolve the situation. Screening may occur by telephone; however, the need for face to face crisis screening may occur as a result of a “walk in” to a Responsible Agency at any point during treatment.