

Peer Review

Activities which are usually not considered protected or confidential for the purposes of monitoring, utilization management and performance improvement. For example, peer review of an individual's general practice patterns is usually not confidential, as the goal is to examine variability in practice and to compare practice patterns to other similar providers. Clinical record review results are also generally not confidential when used as part of ongoing monitoring efforts.